QUAIRE FARM.

MARK TWAIN'S SUMMER HOME.

A Visit to His Home and Study in the Subjects of Emira.

The summer residence of Mr. Clemens is acknowledged to be here in the vicinity of Elmira, notwithstanding he has a house or two in other parts of the United States. His place is known as "Quaire Farm," and is also the residence of his sister-in-law, Mrs. Theodore Crane, and is situated about two miles away from the business portion of the city, on an eminence known as "East Hill." The funny man's house is reached from the city by a winding road which is steep, very steep, and at times is really a dangerous driveway. We go thither in a coupe drawn by two horses, to whom the task of climbing seems not an unfamiliar one. Up and still up, and after an exciting dash up the hill-side we see the house in the distance and handkerchiefs flying from the veranda. A few moments later I alight from the coupe, and am seated in a huge easy chair with the members of Mark Twain's family on every side.

The house, an elegantly built and furnished structure, has an abundance of windows and glass doors on the south side, so that, from within, the lovely scenery in the valley below is plainly visible. An arched carriage-way connects with the veranda and the whole is protected from glare and heat by vines and awnings so as not to obstruct the view from the front of the house and beyond, in place of the pretty lawn, is a huge field of oats, which completely shrouds the brow of the hill and with its undulating surface softens and disguises any abruptness or roughness which there might otherwise be in the foreground.

The house throughout is furnished in an elegant and costly manner. Divans, Persian rugs, easy chairs, books, statuary, articles of vertu and bric-a-brac are on every side, and the whole has the appearance of a place where one could dream his life away. Mr. Clemens notices to his study every morning after breakfast and writes steadily until 4 in the afternoon. He does all his own work, and employs neither secretary nor amanuensis. He has become quite proficient in the use of the typewriter, and utilizes that instrument in attending to his correspondence. During the past few weeks he has been somewhat annoyed by visitors and sight-seers. One day in the week (and this happens to be the very day) the general public is allowed to see the place, and down to the city meeting some of his friends, indulging in a hotel dinner and several games of billiards. This is what he calls rest from his literary labors.

Owing to his absence we have an opportunity of peeping into a room of great interest. The visitor finds the humorist's study higher up the hill, in the rear of the house and screened by vines and evergreens. It is a small octagonal building, containing but a single room. Here the humorist does the greater portion of his manuscript work, and most of his business Mark Twain has worked industriously, for, notwithstanding the fact that he has been called indolent, he is a most indefatigable worker. To keep away the large number of sightseers who come up the big stair to his study, he has posted on the door the following novel sign: "Step Softly! Keep away! Do not Disturb the Remains!" In spite of this characteristic warning we open the door and enter. The floor is bare and has across one corner some pages of manuscript and scraps of newspaper articles pinned to it to prevent dispersion by the wind. There is a table in the center of the room, covered with books, pamphlets, newspapers, manuscripts, and all the paraphernalia of authorship. On one side is a comfortable-looking lounge, somewhat soiled by use, and over the fireplace is a shelf, on which rests a few books and a couple of boxes of choice cigars. That is all except a pervasive odor of smoke.

The 5 o'clock dinner hour brings Mark Twain from the city, and he joins his family in the parlor. He is now 47 years of age, with iron gray hair cut rather short, and moustache of the same color. He is of medium height, inclining to portliness, has a small, black, piercing eye and a rufous aquiline nose. He is pleasant in his manner and talks when he has anything to say, but has a particular horror of people who expect to be entertained by his remarks, and especially of some who seem to think that they must talk nothing but nonsense in his presence. He is remarkably domestic in his tastes, and is blessed with a very lovely wife and three beautiful little daughters.

One View of Woman's Duty.

Chicago Inter-Ocean.

There is a certain sort of significance in that Montreal position toward bangs and frizzes. There is something praiseworthy in his frank and fearless conservatism. A man who will stand up in his pulpit in this day and decade and rebuke the women of his church for wearing their hair in fashionable forms, a man whose opinion is worth considering. It cannot be that he stands quite alone in his views. All men who teach or serve the public come to be, to a greater or less degree, representative men, typical men. There is a certain conservatism in the forms of thought. So there must be others who think with our bishop of Montreal. There must be many of the public for whom he acts as mouthpiece. His beliefs are, therefore, doubly worth considering. The man in fashionable form, a man whose opinion is worth considering. Of the people who speak not aloud there are those who think as he does.

In condemning the wearing of frizzes the Montreal man attacks a general principle. Though his limitations may have been clear to his own mind, they do not appear to be. We wish to know, after all, if it is any woman's duty, under any circumstances whatever, to make herself look ugly? Many women do look very ugly with their hair drawn plainly away from their faces. Can it possibly be right to see them for them to arrange it like that to go to church and prayer-meeting? And would it not be good of them to fix it and crimp it as soon as they reached home again?

Woman's first duty is to make herself look just as pretty as possible under all circumstances. No matter how small the degree of her personal beauty, she has no right to do anything to detract from it. Indeed, of all her "rights," that of looking well is most inherent and most inalienable. Woman is the conservator of beauty, and the ideal woman is always beautiful.

There is a discussion as to the identity of that wonderful statue in the museum of the Louvre in Paris which has been called the Venus of Milo. People who hardly think things think now that it could have been intended for a Venus by its unknown sculptor, because of its high and spiritual beauty. It is an ideal representation of an ideal woman, and Venus, however entertaining a personage she may have been, was not at all what a goddess ought to be. It is more probable that the statue was intended as a Victory to adorn one of the old Greek temples. The soul of the artist rose to grand conception, his chief reached grand execution of the noble thought, and he sculptured this perfectly beautiful and ideal woman. His thought embodied a truth that makes his work immortal—the truth that woman ought to be just as beautiful as she can be, because she is—to use that all too current phrase—"a trustee for beauty."

It is a blessed good thing that most of woman-kind do not need to study the subject in an abstract light to arrive at wise conclusions in regard to becoming bonnets or harmonizing hair ribbons. Be it intonation or be it vanity, they know that it is their duty as well as their delight to look pretty. They could not be doing wrong and not their crimps sagely at that Montreal divine and cry out in chorus against him; except, perhaps, in that matter of bangs. Here we would enter as grave a protest as the Canadian clergyman himself. Bangs are an abomination, and should be abolished. Bangs are not beautiful; bangs are beastly. They look like the hirsute ornaments of a King Charles spaniel. The preacher is right. Bangs ought to be done away with, but let frizzes remain.

Let the clergyman meditate upon that verse from the good old Book which describes the beauty of the new Jerusalem as like unto that of a bride adorned for her husband. If he has seen as many brides as it falls to the lot of most clergymen to behold, he will own that the simile is good and worthy, even though a part of the adornments of a modern bride be frizzes and crimps, or even puffs and "water waves."

FAVORED BY FORTUNE.

How a Thunder-Storm Saved a Quarter for Gustav and Bertie Cecil.

From the Chicago Tribune.

"Another dish, please." "Under the star-gemmed heavens Daphne McCarthy and Bertie Cecil were sitting this beautiful summer night—sitting side by side beneath the spreading branches of an oak tree that had braved the storms of centuries, while the silvered pendulings of moonlight dancing so gaily among the verdure clad branches that waved languidly above their heads gave to the scene a touch of wondrous beauty and silent splendor.

"Did you speak, darling?" asked Bertie, bounding over the girl and gazing at her with eyes whose fervid glances told more eloquently than words of the great love he bore her. But back out in the dark look, back of the love laden tones, there was a haunting fear, a ghastly horror, which all the senuous languor of the place could not dispel. Up from the meadow beyond the brookside came the noisy chirping of the crickets, and the wind, which had risen as they sat there, began to blow in strange, sobbing cadences through the evergreens and larches in the village churchyard. The shen of fleecy clouds that had flecked the zenith, lending an added splendor to the luminous bloom of the horizon, had suddenly faded away, and in its place appeared an inky mass, from whose black bosom the forked lightning leaped like a hissing serpent from the darkness jungle of an Indian forest. Already the rain drops were plashing among the dark colored leaves of the trees.

"Did you speak, sweetheart?" asked Bertie again.

"I was thinking," replied Daphne, in low, thrilling tones that showed the intensity of her yearning, "of having another dish of cream; but it is too late now," and rising from the table she led the way to the street car.

Bertie followed her in a dazed way, but under the sombre look of his pure young face there was a peaceful, almost holy joy. "Heaven has heard her off!" he said softly, "but I shall pay dearly for this when the oysters come, for it does not rain in winter."

Goldsmith's Testament.

"That dire disease, whose ruthless power withers the beauty's transient flower," No truer description could be given of the disease of the kidneys, which, uncurable, torments the strongest men in a very short time. And it is Goldsmith's testament which has contained his power, and spoken of

"Hunt's Remedy, whose matchless worth, makes it a boon to all the earth." It is surely a boon to thousands of sufferers who have been able to find relief now here.

Nobody enjoys the nicest surroundings if in bad health. There are miserable people about to-day to whom a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic would bring more solid comfort than all the medicine they have ever tried.—New York Herald.

How's the baby?

"How's the baby?" "His crop is better this morning, thank you. We gave him some of Thomas' Electric Oil as you advised, doctor, and shall give him some more in an hour or so." him, and in the presence of his whole staff, while the weeping woman stood by, said, "Did you take this horse?" "Yes, general, I was forced to; I had lost mine."

"Did you write this paper, which you know is worthless?" "Yes, general." Then turning to his aide-de-camp, he said, "restore the horse to this poor woman," and, tearing up the paper with a withering look at the offending officer, he added, "Is this the way Italians fight for the freedom of their country? Do no more of soldier of mine!" and he sent him back to Rome.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS.

one of the very few tonic medicines that are not composed mostly of alcohol or whisky, thus becoming a fruitful source of intemperance by promoting a desire for rum.

No Whisky!

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is guaranteed to be a non-intoxicating stimulant, and it will, in nearly every case, take the place of all liquor, and at the same time absolutely kill the desire for whisky and other intoxicating beverages.

REV. G. W. RICK, editor of the American Christian Review, says of BROWN'S IRON BITTERS:

Chc., O., Nov. 16, 1881. Gentls.—The foolish wasting of vital force in business, pleasure, and vicious indulgence of our people, makes your preparation a necessity; and if applied, will save hundreds who resort to saloons for temporary recuperation.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS has been thoroughly tested for dyspepsia, indigestion, biliousness, weakness, debility, overwork, rheumatism, neuralgia, consumption, liver complaints, kidney troubles, &c., and it never fails to render speedy and permanent relief.
